CHRIST SCIENTIST CHURCH NEARING COMPLETION HERE

The new church building of the Christian Science Society in Redwood City, located near the Sequoia Union High School, is nearing completion. The structure, which has a forty-eight foot frontage on Brewster avenue and a seventy-eight foot depth on Elwood street, is English in design with Tudor-Gothic detail. The exterior finish is a warm colored gray stucco with a lightly troweled texture of surface. A shingle tile roof caps the whole with color and strength. Although small, it is characterized by unusual simplicity and dignity.

One enters the foyer from a small outer vestibule through leaded glass doors ornamented with wooden Gothic tracery and panels. The ample foyer, with its beamed wooden ceiling and stairway to the balcony, opens into the auditorium, reading room, Sunday school room and cloak rooms. The readers' rooms and musicians' room are at the rear of the building with a separate entrance from Elwood street.

An interesting note is struck by the entrance to the sales and reading rooms from Elwood street which takes in under an attractive little porch with carved verge boards and open timbering.

The auditorium, with a seating capacity of about two hundred, creates an impression of loftiness and depth by reason of an open, timbered ceiling with heavy trusses and deep-set, diamond leaded windows.

The reader's platform is framed by a high pointed arch with the desk projecting slightly forward into the auditorium space. The sides and rear of the platform have a high wood panelled wainscott with concealed doors cut in on both sides. Above the panelling at the back of the platform the arch is repeated and filled with wooden tracery which forms the organ screen.

The Christian Science Society in Redwood City was organized Ferbuary 2, 1903. On February 21, they held their first services in the Woman's Club house on Clinton street, where they have continued until the present time. In November, 1926, a lot was selected and by December of the following year, church building was under consideration. Plans were completed and accepted, the summer of 1928 and on the 20th of September 20, ground was broken and building operations begun.

C. P. Thiel, manager of Gardiner's Men's Store has been confined to his home with the "flu" since Sunday.

Lights, Sewers Ordered For Broadway Extension

Plans and specifications for the erection of electroliers on the extension of Main street as far as Walnut street and for the laying of sewer pipes as far as Chestnut street were accepted by the city council Monday evening. Bids for this work will be opened on January 7.

It is the intention of the council to have this work hurried along as quickly as possible in order that the construction of the street may be undertaken as soon as the rainy season is over.

The board also decided to ask the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. to install all necessary gas lines and laterals before the street is built. It was felt by the board that no permit should be granted to tear up the street after it was laid.

Eastern Star Party Is Greatly Enjoyed

Members of Sequoia Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, were hosts on Monday evening to the members of the Masonic Lodge, the De Molays and the Rainbow Girls, following the regular meeting of the chapter. Kiwanians Hear of Stanford-Army Game

The experiences of a professor on the train of a champion football team were interestingly told to members of the Redwood City Kiwanis club Wednesday by Professor Owen of Stanford. Professor Owen was with the Stanford football team on its trip to New York when they defeated the Army at Yankee field.

Professor Owen told in a most interesting manner of the game, and gave many sidelights which could not be gained from the press reports of that great event, as well as describing many humorous incidents which occurred enroute. The chairman of the meeting was Donald Williams.

An interesting feature of the meeting was the raffling of a large turkey by Roscoe Stevens and Edward Harrison. Tickets were sold and the winning number drawn. The turkey was won by Z. T. Thorning. Thorning immediately put the turkey up at auction, and proceeded to bid the turkey in himself for $10.50. He then gave the turkey to the club for its next week's dinner. By means of the raffle and the auction the club's Christmas box fund for needy families was increased by close to sixty dollars.

Two cars were wrecked and one of the drivers injured Monday evening when a car driven by Fred Myers of 416 King street collided with one driven by C. E. Blane escaped without personal injuries, but Myers suffered a severe injury to one eye which may result in the loss of sight to that organ. He was removed to the Community hospital, where first aid treatment was administered.

CITY MANAGER PLAN ADOPTED FOR CHARTER

Freeholders Split On Council Number

Whether the business of the city government can best be accomplished by a council of five or seven members is the question now being considered by the committee of freeholders recently elected. The committee met Wednesday evening at which time the reports of two of the committees were received. These were the committee on forms of which the members are Mrs. A. S. Kalenborn, George McNulty and Ed Samson; and the committee on the council consisting of Henry Witte, Mark Ryan and Thomas Tuite.

In its report the committee on forms of government recommended a council of five members. The council committee in its report recommended a council of seven members. This question was then discussed and the matter was laid over for further consideration.

At the next meeting of the council the finance committee, consisting of C. M. Doxsee, C. G. Lambert and Clarence Choate, will report and on January 6th the general committee, and on January 9th the administrative committee will have their reports ready.

At the previous meeting of the committee the city manager form of government was adopted as one of the provisions of the proposed charter which will be placed before the people for consideration.

P. G. & E. Growth Shows State's Trend

The population trend in northern California is indicated by data released by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, wrerein it is reported that the company now serves 998,044 consumers, an increase of 30,327 for the ten-months period to date which is just a little less than 2,000 short of a million consumers.

The San Francisco Division, serving the city and county of San Francisco leads for the period in consumer gain by 7,741. Following closely in the East Bay Division, serving in Alameda and Contra Costa counties with a gain of 7,611 and San Jose Division, serving Santa Clara and San Mateo counties with a gain of 5,051.

Proportionately the San Jose territory shows the best gain of the three, approximately 5 3-10% although the Coast Valleys territory, serving San Benito and Monterey counties, with a gain of 1,750 consumers or 9%, leads all divisions.

Mrs. E. J. McAuliffe returned this week from the Community hospital with her baby daughter. The little girl, born December 6, is the third child in the family.

To Announce Theatre Opening

Definite announcement of the opening of the new Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, will be made within a few days, according to Manager Otway J. Cosgrave, representing the Arkush Peninsula Theatres circuit in that town.

The opening of the new theatre will mark the third new house to be opened by that progressive company in as many years. The Peninsula, Burlingame, was first, when the new Varsity in Palo Alto and now the Sequoia in Redwood City. It is with pardonable pride that the heads of the organization look upon the new Redwood house as being perhaps the most unique and beautiful of their chain of five first-class theatres. Everything to render service, comfort and entertainment second to no other show house has been incorporated in the building to the end that the people of Redwood and surrounding country may enjoy themselves amid cheerful surroundings.

Prices are to be set at a popular scale and shortly after the opening the installation of equipment for Vitaphone and Movietone sound and dialogue pictures will be definitely announced.

LEGAL PHASES CONSIDERED IN CONSOLIDATION

Consolidation Group Studies Borough Plan

The possibility of the situation which might arise if one or more of the cities of this county should vote against consolidation with San Francisco in the event that the consolidation matter is ever put to a vote, was considered at the last meeting of the legal committee of the San Mateo-San Francisco Survey Committee.

Major Chas. N. Kirkbride, chairman of the legal committee and representing the San Mateo Chamber of Commerce, said that the first duty of the legal committee should be to determine whether the present Enabling Act should be amended at the coming session of the legislature or whether the constitution should be amended, or both. He pointed out that the Enabling Act was evidently drawn so that the initiative movement for consolidation should come from San Mateo county.

Major Kirkbride explained that the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco County may submit the proposition, and at the request of 15 per cent of the voters of San Francisco, must submit the question of consolidation to a vote; and under similar procedure the City Council of any San Mateo county city may, or must, submit the question to the voters. It is not mandatory, however, for any city to hold such an election, just because some other city does so he explained.

Colonel Allen G. Wright of San Francisco stated that at present the State Constitution provides that San Francisco may consolidate only with San Mateo County or a portion thereof; that this provision and the Enabling Act are both broadly drawn and the method of procedure is left open to be determined by agreement between the parties concerned. He said that the present vital problem is to decide in what way the Enabling Act should be amended to make it more perfect. He also explained that the question of consolidation could be put to a vote in one of two ways; first, a straightaway acceptance of consolidation; second, an acceptance of consolidation provided a proposed charter amendment, presented to the voters at the same time, be adopted.

The borough plan came under discussion, and Colonel Wright stated that under the law as many boroughs could be set up as desired.

Skeleton Believed to Be 25,000 Years Old

Four skulls, a skeleton and a collection of tools dug out of shell heaps in southern Algeria by Paul Nesbit, graduate anthropology student at the University of Chicago, has been brought to the University. Prof. Fay Cooper Cole believes they represent a hitherto unknown race which lived in northern Africa about 25,000 years ago, and that this race was probably the forerunner of the modern European races. The photograph shows Nesbit and Miss Dena Shapiro, an anthropology student, looking over the skeleton.

Santa's Steed—the Reindeer

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Drawings by Ray Walters)

AS EVERY child knows, Santa Claus makes his rounds on Christmas eve in a sleigh drawn by "eight tiny reindeer and their names are "Dasher," "Dancer," "Prancer," "Vixen," "Comet," "Cupid," "Donder" and "Blitzen." The eight-reindeer team, however, was not always Kriss Kringle's motive power. Time was when he made his visits mounted on a snowy white horse. That was when he was known as Sinterklass, the pet name of the little Dutch children for their friend, Bishop St. Nicholas, who, they believed, brought them gifts on St. Nicholas eve, December 5.

When Sinterklass came to New Amsterdam and became Americanized, his name was changed to Santa Claus and he began using a little wagon drawn by a fat pony, for his visits on New Year's eve instead of December 5. Then in 1822 Clement Clark Moore wrote the famous poem which he called "A Visit From St. Nicholas," but which later became famous as "The Night Before Christmas." In this poem Santa's equipage was the "miniature sleigh and eight tiny reindeer" and the sleigh and reindeer it has been ever since.

Just as Santa Claus is an "immigrant" and a "naturalized American," so are the steeds which he drives. No doubt it will be a surprise to many Americans to learn just how many of these "immigrants" there are in America now as well as to know that the reindeer is not only a part of the symbolism of Christmas but in one part of this continent he is an important economic factor. Up in Alaska there are more than 700,000 of these animals grazing on the frozen tundra of the North and their rapid increase, despite the fact that more than 250,000 have been slaughtered for food since they were first introduced here, is America's protection against a meat famine caused by the rapid diminishing of our beef herds. All of which is due to an experiment which our far-seeing Uncle Sam embarked upon some thirty-seven years ago. The story of that experiment and the part which a Wisconsin professor had in it is told by a writer in the Milwaukee Journal as follows:

Reindeer are caribou, domesticated through many centuries. The average weight of a full-grown animal is 150 pounds, but by crossing with the larger woods caribou, it is hoped to develop an animal of 250 pounds. Through the centuries of domestication its flesh has lost the game flavor until now it is said to resemble a cross between duck and mutton.

The animals are more docile than cattle. A man is safe in a milling herd, although he may appear to a watcher to be in imminent danger of being trampled under the feet or impaled on the horns of the deer. This docility, together with knowledge of their habits, makes them the easiest to handle of all domestic animals. The roundup is simplified by the fact that the mosquitoes in summer drive the deer to the sea coast, where they are protected by ocean breezes. Herding is made easy by their attachment to their grazing ground. A reindeer turned loose many days' journey from the pasture of its own herd will find its way surely and quickly home.

Reindeer were introduced to Alaska in 1891. In that year sixteen were brought from Siberia at the instigation of Dr. Sheldon Jackson. When Doctor Jackson was sent to Alaska by the government to establish schools among the natives, he found his wards threatened with starvation as a result of the slaughter by white men of the game animals on which the natives had depended for food. He conceived the idea of replacing the fast disappearing game with reindeer, the principal domestic animal of Lapland and Siberia, the climate and vegetation of which resembled that of Alaska.

Returning to the states and unable to interest congress in the venture, Doctor Jackson sought contributions from the public. He obtained $2,148 with which the first animals were procured in Siberia. At the same time Siberian herdsmen were brought over to care for them.

In 1892 150 more reindeer were imported. Congress then became mildly interested and small appropriations made possible importations through the next ten years until, in 1902, when the Russian government put an embargo on further exportations from Siberia, 1,280 animals had been taken into Alaska.

The Siberian herdsmen proved incompetent as teachers for the Eskimos, and for a time the venture was threatened with failure. It was then that Doctor Jackson went for advice to Prof. Rasmus B. Anderson of Madison, Wis., who, while minister to Denmark, had visited the reindeer herds of Lapland. Doctor Jackson's early interest in the animals had been aroused by a report on the industry there made by the professor.

In pursuance of Professor Anderson's advice, Lapp herders were engaged to replace the Siberians as instructors to the Eskimos. Each was lent 100 animals from the government herd for a period of years, at the end of which an equal number of reindeer were required to be returned to the government. The Lapps were permitted to retain the increase.

The Eskimos were apprenticed to the Lapps for a period of four years. At the end of the first year each was given six reindeer, at the end of the second, eight, at the end of the third year, ten, and ten more at the end of his fourth year of training. With normal increases, each man's herd would be almost 100 head by the time he had completed his apprenticeship. He was well equipped to start in business for himself. Today, more than two-thirds of the reindeer of Alaska are owned by natives, of whom some 5,000 have been trained in their care.

The effect of this training on the Eskimos is one of the most important results of the enterprise. Within less than a generation the reindeer industry has advanced the natives of Alaska through one entire stage of civilization—from the primitive to the pastoral, from nomadic hunters to civilized men, independent, responsible, assured of support for themselves and an opportunity to acquire wealth. They have bank accounts, purchase American clothing and food, have adopted improved methods of sanitation and, in some instances, have built frame houses from imported lumber.

Between 1918 and 1925 more than 1,875,000 pounds of reindeer meat was shipped to the United States from Alaska. Two hundred thousand pounds was shipped in 1923, while by 1925, the export had increased to 680,000 pounds. The export for 1927 was expected almost to double that of 1925, the amount depending on shipping facilities. Reindeer meat sells in Nome for 15 to 20 cents a pound. It can be delivered at Seattle for 15 cents a pound, and, with increased shipments and improved methods of handling, even this price can be reduced.

While the only reindeer on this continent now are in Alaska, and the territory's production is restricted by pasturage to four million head, there are millions of acres in Canada where ten times as many can be fed, and vast stretches in northern Europe and Asia where reindeer have been raised for centuries, but never on an extensive scale, where ten times as many can be grazed as in Canada. In all then, 444,000,000 reindeer could be supported by Alaska, Canada and Eurasia, assuring a substantial contribution to the world's supply of food and a utilization of what otherwise would be waste land.

The reindeer roundup rivals as a scene of picturesque activity the old cattle roundups of the western states. Reindeer, like cattle, mill about a common center, but, unlike cattle, a herd will mill in one direction only. This habit simplifies the work of the branders and tally keepers. Chutes are constructed at intervals about the corral, their mouths formed by short wing fences or "horns" projecting inside the corral at an angle opposed to the direction of the herd's motion.

Against these "horns" the edge of the herd, kept in motion by Eskimo herders, is sliced off and, one at a time, the animals are driven down the narrow chute. If the animal is branded, one of the men at the chute will call out the brand. If unbranded, the animal will be seized as it emerges from the chute and either a branding iron applied to its hip or a mark snipped in one of its ears.

Reindeer are prolific. At the normal rate of increase, herds double every three years. Even under the present plan of killing off the surplus males, amounting to about 10 per cent of the herd each year, the animals are almost doubling in numbers every five years.

Within fifteen or twenty years, at the present rate of growth, the herds will have reached the limits of the territory to feed and it will then be necessary further to increase the slaughter of the animals.

Santa Claus a Bishop

The name of Santa Claus is merely slurring the Dutch San Nicholas, which is, of course, Saint Nicholas. American children are probably the only ones in the world who say it just that way.

Nicholas was an actual person. He was Bishop of Myra, in Lycia, Asia Minor, in the first part of the Fourth century of the Christian era. He was the youngest bishop in the history of the church. From the day of his birth Nicholas revealed his piety and grace. He refused on fast days to take the natural nourishment of a child.

But Nicholas was not a barefoot recluse vowed to poverty. His father was a wealthy merchant, and his riches, inherited by the magic wand which fairy godfathers wield, enabled him to be a dispenser of the good things of life as earthly representative of the Supreme Giver of Gifts.

The bankers and brokers wished to give sanctity and dignity to their business and also adopted the generous Nicholas as their heavenly protector. He was, in fact, the most popular saint in the calander.

The feast of Saint Nicholas was originally celebrated on December 6. But when church people in the late Middle ages tried to suppress, for one reason or another, the festivities which grew up around the Boy Saint's day, the children refused to give him up and gradually his festival was assimilated with Christmas day.—John Macy in the Bookman.

Grow Your Own Tree

Washington.—The American Tree association urges you to grow your own Christmas tree and make it the family gathering place. While the native spruces and firs are the customary bearers of gifts, a new variety, the Japanese Nikko fir (Abies homolepis), has entered the lists. It forms a broad, symmetrical crown of dark green lustrous foliage, with strong branches sturdy enough to support the most valuable presents and not so close packed that none can find them. It can be grown in from six to twelve years after planting, depending on the size desired, and from one to two thousand will thrive on each acre. Its air of sturdiness and thrift lends it wholesome symbolism, particularly needed at this time of year.

It is a new, little known tree that has been grown here and there in small quantities for decorative planting. Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the association, has been experimenting with it for the last twelve or fifteen years. He has concluded that it will be a most successful and useful variety to spread over the millions of slacker acres that are now economic liabilities, and will find a place in the garden. It grows as rapidly as a native red spruce or balsam fir, the two varieties most used in the Northwest, and Mr. Pack believes that it is more artistic in form than the Norway spruce.

MY FAVORITE STORIES

By IRVIN S. COBB

A Little Story for Husbands to Read

JONES, who had been married a considerable number of years, took counsel with one of his bachelor friends.

"It seems to me," he said, "that my domestic affairs are slipping into a rut. I'm afraid my wife is getting bored. There don't seem to be any of the romance left that we had in our early married life. I wish I knew what is the matter."

"I can make a guess," said his confidant. "Do you still pay your wife those little attentions that you used to pay her when you were courting her?"

"Well," confessed Jones, "I can't say that I do."

"I thought as much," said the wise counselor. "The trouble with you is that you're like that other married man who said under similar conditions that when you'd run to catch a car you didn't need to run any more after you have caught it. Now, this is my advice to you: Turn over a new leaf. Start this very day. Begin paying your wife a little attention. Fuss over her just as you used to do when you were first engaged. Try to be a sweetheart to her instead of just a husband."

"By gum, maybe you're right," said Jones. "I'll do that very thing."

That evening, when he burst in the front door, his arms laden with parcels, he planted a warm kiss upon the cheek of the astonished Mrs. Jones and in tones of a well-worked-up enthusiasm he cried out:

"Dearie, this is going to be a big night for us! Here's a ten-pound box of candy for you and here's a dozen American Beauty roses. Now I want you to slip into your best frock. I've got a table reserved at the Ritz-Carlton for dinner and I've ordered two seats for the opera. Why—what's the matter?" he added, seeing that her lips trembled.

"Well, to begin with," she said, "the cook quit today. Your Aunt Clara arrived unexpectedly for a visit and there's no telling how long she'll stay, both the children were sent from school, sick with bad colds, and now—" she burst into tears "—and now, to cap the climax, you come home drunk!"

For Purposes of Concealment

NOT so very long ago the military attache of one of these flywheel republics in Central America, where they are always having revolutions, came up to New York from the legation at Washington on important official business. Calling upon a military tailor on Fifth avenue he explained his mission. There had been a change of administrations in his country—the first one, it would seem, in nearly nine months—and the new government had decided to alter the uniforms of all branches of the national defense.

It was the visitor's purpose to give the contracts. He had brought with him special designs, hand-colored in the chosen effects. There ensued a busy time in the tailor shop. It would seem that the fancy of the Central Americans ran to startling contrasts in color and to much use of braid, buttons, rosettes, festoons and plumage.

Undress and full-dress had been selected for the navy, for the officers and men of the infantry, and for the artillery. Next, the attache produced a drawing for a costume more gorgeous than any he already had shown. There was a cocked hat, rather resembling the kind worn by the Knights Templar in this country excepting that it was bright red in color with an adornment of vivid green parrot feathers floating out behind. There was a double-breasted blue coat heavily embossed with gold lace on the cuffs, sleeves, breast, collar and skirts. There were baggy, crimson riding-breeches also, beinced down the seams. There was a pair of shiny black, patent-leather riding boots with an adornment of silver spurs and, for final touches, massive bullion epaulets and white crossbelts finished off with bright buckles.

"Ah," said the dazzled tailor, "how very striking! I presume this uniform is to be worn by your cavalry?"

"Oh, no," said the attache. "This is for our secret service."

The oldest school in England, according to a historian of medieval schools, is King's school at Canterbury, Kent, which was founded in 598, the year after St. Augustine's mission.

More Deep-Sea Sailors

At the present time there are more men sailing the seas than there were 20 or 30 years ago, although there are now fewer sailing vessels. This decrease is more than made up by the increased number of steamers.

The Christmas Spirit In Action

AT no other time of the year are want and privation felt as at Christmas, and at that time the want is felt equally by the child who finds that Santa has passed unseeing, and the parent, who unable to change the situation, must see the disappointment which the child suffers. For this reason, the Christmas season is a time of opportunity for unselfish kindness. A little sacrifice of time and thought, a little giving, a little kindness, and the cold disappointment of a cheerless Christmas may be turned into happiness and joy for some unfortunate youngster.

Fortunately, we have in Redwood City many who are willing to do just these things, and we feel that the gratitude of the community is due those who have worked to make this Christmas season happy for the children. Every year the kiddies of the community are assured of two treats at least as their portion at the Christmas time.

A group of kindly and self-sacrificing men and women were at work many weeks ago preparing for the Christmas tree and party last Saturday, and almost two thousand little tots were given a good time and a little present as the result. To some, well provided and well supplied in every way the little gift was not so much; but to many it was the difference between joy and disappointment.

Then there was the Exchange Club show. This service club has annually provided a Christmas party for the children of the community. In this project they have always had the whole-souled cooperation of the Sequoia Theatre and every employee from E. J. Arkush, president of the company, down. On Tuesday an entertaining picture was provided and every employee of the theatre gave his services free in order that the children might be made happy. Otway J. Cosgrave, manager, secured the film and kept open house for the club. Oscar H. Currall, the organist, Guy L. Fonda, the operator, and every other employee of the house, gave a hundred per cent co-operation to make the affair a success.

It is affairs of this sort which lead us to think of Christmas as did that happy nephew of Scrouge's, "as a good time, a kind, forgiving charitable, pleasant time; the only time, I know of in the long calander of the year, when men and women seem by one consent to open their shut-up hearts freely, and to think of the people below them as if they really were fellow passengers to the grave, and not another race of creatures bound on other journeys."

D. L. Walter To Change Firm Name

The real estate firm of Lambert and Walter, which has been responsible for a great deal of the real estate history of San Mateo county, and the oldest firm in the county, having the largest and finst offices of any firm of realtors between San Francisco and San Jose, is now owned and managed by Dave L. Walter, who, in November, purchased the one-half interest in the business of his partner and all the real estate owned by the firm including the office buildings. Walter is now conducting the business.

During 1929 the firm name will be changed to the Walter Realty Company as successors to Lambert and Walter, which in 1919 succeeded to the real estate and insurance business conducted for a great many years by the Redwood City Realty Company, incorporated in 1904.

Walter is very well known throughout the State, as he has previously evinced a great deal of interest in the California Real Estate Association work, served for a number of years on the Board of Directors, having helped organize the Redwood City and Burlingame Boards, is State director and now vice-president-elect of the 8th District of the California Real Estate Association. He is also Executor Councillor of the Mortgage and Finance Division of National Association of Real Estate Boards, and a former director of the California Insurance Agents Association. The lively interest taken by Walter in the association work will be continued in the future, as he is a staunch believer in a strong organization that will be able to help realtors as well as help the property owners of the State of California.

The firm of Lambert & Walter conducts its business in its main office on Broadway, opposite the courthouse, Redwood City, a branch office on El Camino Real, Redwood City, another branch office on El Camino Real, Beresford, and also a Burlingame office, 1479 Burlingame avenue at El Camino Real, which covers the real estate business in the entire County of San Mateo, all of which offices will continue the same in the future as in the past.

The entire staff of Lambert & Walter remains with the new firm and one of the former members, John Munday, has returned to renew his association.

The office staff consists of Dave L. Walter, president; Miss Margaret Cussen, treasurer and Miss Frances E. White, secretary. Miss Cussen has been with the firm eleven years, being previously with the Redwood City Realty Co., the real estate and insurance business of which was taken over by Lambert & Walter in 1919.

Gustave Bresse is in charge of the insurance department and W. D. Dunsmore is at the head of the Exchange Department. Others associated with the firm in the local office are John Munday, L. C. Rowen and G. S. Ferguson.

The Burlingame office is managed by Harry B. Young, and Florence Watson is in charge of the rental department.

The interior of the Redwood City office has been remodeled and during the coming summer Mr. Walter announces that the exterior of the building will be remodeled to conform to the architecture of the new Sequoia Theatre, across the street.

The new firm announces a number of important sales during the past two weeks, among these being the Crystal Apartments on Bayswater avenue, Burlingame, the Goodenough residence on Durlston road, Edgewood Park, this city, to Lester Prior and a large holding on Arlington Road, Wellesley Park, owneded by Prior; these three transactions amounting to $46,000. Other sales are pending but are not ready to be announced.

State Urges Use of U. S. Mail for Auto Registration

Although the Division of Motor Vehicles and its branch offices are all now open for counter deliveries of the new 1929 license plates more than a quarter of a million Californians have chosen the "mail order" order route, recommended by the division as the easiest way to file their applications for license renewal.

The division is willing to handle all calls for plates over the counters but regards it as vastly more convenient for the motorist to enclose his fee and registration certificate in an envelope and mail them to Sacramento. Nothing else is required and delivery is prompt by mail.

Motorists who have completed the payments on their cars during the year are also required to send an extra $1 for the transfer fee.

The division urges motorists to lose no time in filing their applications as the law fixes a penalty equal to 100 percent of the fee on those who fail to seek renewal during the allotted period.

That took you 40 minutes to do by hand

THAT'S just one example of flat work. And the flat pieces, you know, make up some 90% of the family ironing

This new invention irons the loads of flat work in one-third the time required by hand—better than the most expert hand laundress could do.

It operates from the wringer shaft of your Thor Washing Machine. It is portable—carried with ease.

It slips into a kitchen drawer or closet when not in use. And it heats as fast as an ordinary electric iron.

Rid yourself today of the drudgery of hand ironing. It isn't worth the price you're paying. Give us 30 minutes to demonstrate this new invention in your home—the results will amaze you.

Scottish Rite Masons To Hold Chaistmas Party

The Scottish Rite Bodies invite all members of the Masonic fraternity and their families to a Christmas Tree Party to be held this evening at 7:30 p. m. in the temple ball room.

The committee chairman is Y. D. Hensill, and assisting him are H. H. Fitch, senior warden of the San Jose Lodge of Perfection, and Henry Harms.

It is planned to have a mammoth Christmas tree with proper decorations and the traditional fire place and chimney, through which it is expected that Santa Claus will descend. Every person attending the festivities will be required to bring, as admission to the evening's entertainment, two presents. These presents are not to be designated as for any particular person, but will be distributed at the will and pleasure of his Merriness, Santa Claus.

The committee in charge states that many surprises will be in store for those present. Appropriate music will be played, and the pupils of Betty Matheny McDonald will present several fancy dance numbers.

The chidren of the Home of Benevolence will be the honored guests of the evening.

All the members and their Masonic friends are invited to a New Year's Eve dance to be held in the ball room of the temple. There will be good music, many favors and the usual noise makers. There will be a charge of 50c per person.

GO EAST VIA THE SUNSET ROUTE

New Orleans
entertains the Nation

The Mardi Gras—January 7 to February 12—is New Orleans invitation to the world to come and enjoy life. Days and nights of picturesque revelry.

And this spectacle, which attracts thousands of visitors each year, can be a joyous part of your trip east—at no added fare—when you go via the SUNSET ROUTE.

Southern Pacific's SUNSET ROUTE, linking the three great "storied" cities, San Francisco, New Orleans and New York is startling in it's vivid contrasts.

From Los Angeles, through orange groves, into the strangeness of the desert—where now the new gay winter resorts are active—to Phoenix. A one day motor side-trip takes you over the famous Apache Trail. Next El Paso, with Juarez, Old Mexico just 5 minutes away. San Antonio. The bayous and canefields of Louisiana. Then New Orleans. Thence by rail to your midwest or eastern destination, or via Southern Pacific steamship (no added cost) to New York.

America's gayest spectacle—the Mardi Gras

And this is but one of Southern Pacific's 4 great routes to the east. Go this way, return another. In that way you double the enjoyment of your trip, for each route is different.

TERCHERS OF COUNRY MEET FOR INSTITUTE

By W. J. Savage

The teachers' institute of San Mateo county for 1928 was called to order by Superintendent Pansy Jewett Abbott in the Burlingame high school, last Monday morning, at 9:30. Five hundred and thirty teachers represent the educators of this county. Of these 312, including kindergarten, nurses and special teachers, are engaged in elementary work and 218 are employed in high schools and the junior college.

Excepting a few who had been excused from attendance for valid reasons, by the Board of Education, all were present and enthusiastic to make the institute a success by getting some improvement from the various speakers.

As usual the general appearance of the gathering was highly complimentary. Pretty dresses and becoming suits indicated good judgment and modern ideas. There was not a sign, present, of the teacher who might know anything else and not the fine art of presenting a neat appearance. The typical freak teacher is now to be found only in story-books or in movie pictures. Better wages, reasonable tenure, and a fair amount of appreciation have improved the teachers' profession so much that now every public educator is a fortunate individual and those of our county are favored in a generous way.

While the fairer sex predominated there were many men present. Both men and women presented considerable superiority of mind, indicating that the coming generation is in no danger of not being well instructed. A large orchestra of good musicians of the Burlingame high school, directed by Elmer H. Young, pleasantly introduced the work of the institute and made all the teachers feel grateful.

Superintendent Pansy J. Abbott welcomed all and added that the program had been arranged so that each element might obtain as much real benefit as possible; that she desired to learn from the teachers just how the arrangement appealed to them so that it might be known what would be best to do for next year's meeting. She continued that she was grateful and proud of the support all of the teachers had accorded her in all her efforts to keep San Mateo county, educationally, even up with the best in the State. In this respect she announced that this county was one hundred per cent in California Teachers' Association membership, last year, and that it would have the same good standing this year. John D. Gieh of Greersburg school, was appointed to receive the memberships from those who had not already joined. The teachers showed their appreciation of Miss Pansy Jewett Abbott with general applause.

Roy W. Cloud, former superintendent for many years, and now executive secretary of the California Teachers' Association, said that in the performance of his work he had traveled up and down the State more than once and had made a trip across the continent to attend a national convention and that it was his pleasure to report that he had found all school affairs in a flourishing condition, that more schools and counties had hundred per cent records in C. T. A. memberships than ever before and that hereafter a diploma of honor would be sent to every school whose teachers had paid in full. He also said that the pension fund of the teachers was being reorganized so that it would be safer than at present; that, perhaps, the teachers would pay in more than they do now but woul drecelve more when it was needed; that a teacher might withdraw at any time if he quit teaching and get his money back with interest; and that the whole new plan depends upon whether the State would appropriate the large sums of money expected. He said the C. T. A. would continue to work for the improvement of the teachers' profession as it had done in the past.

At the close of Roy W. Cloud's talk the institute was turned over to the San Mateo Teachers' Association and President G. W. Hall assumed the gavel. Secretary-treasurer Henry C. Hall read the minutes of the previous meeting and reported there was $631 in the Bank of South San Francisco. The minutes and the report were approved. President Hall then announced that there was a plan of school reorganization known as the County Unit Plan, to be proposed to the coming State Legislature by the Tax Payers' Association. As reported he feared it would be injurious in various ways to the school management of this county and that consequently it was right that this institute should take a stand concerning it.

For officers of the local association for the ensuing year nominations were made for president and vice-president but all declined except James Ferguson of the Jefferson Union High School for president and R L. Crane of Hillsborough for vice-president and were elected by acclammation. For secretary-treasurer H. C. Hall was reelected without opposition. Miss Pansy J. Abbott and Oscar H. Olson were elected delegates to the California Teachers' Association. The new president, James Ferguson assumed the chair in a few words, and adjourned the meeting.

The second and third days of the institute were spent in San Francisco with 7000 other teachers from the eight counties.

"He then said 'Jane, Jane,' in an agonized voice, and as my name is not Jane there was some amusement, especially when he added: 'She is asleep. I cannot rouse her.' Almost immediately after that, however, he said 'Robinson's point,' and something about a boat there. (We think now that the allusion may have been to the lighthouse you mention.) After that he was quiet for a time and I begged to be allowed to waken him but just as we had turned on the lights again he got up, with his eyes still closed, and leaning over the table, seemed to be staring at the gentleman across from him. (A Mr. Lewis a very nice man, with whom my husband plays golf a great deal.)

"'I have not changed my attitude,' he said, in a really terrible voice. 'I repudiate you and all your works. I am not afraid of you. The thing is monstrous, and society should be warned against you.'

"I have forgotten to say that he had kept his right hand closed, as though he had something in it. He made a gesture as though he threw this something away, and then looked at Mr. Lewis again and said: 'I have warned you; I shall tell the police.'

"He seemed to be in a state of great excitement, and hardly able to breathe. He fell back into the chair, and our doctor friend reached over and felt his pulse. He says now that, although his heart is perfectly sound, it had almost stopped. Indeed, he would have fallen had the doctor not caught him. In a short time he came around and seemed to think he had been asleep. He felt, however, very wretched the next day.

"This may not interest you, but the mention of Robinson's point in your article, and the similarity in time, has struck me as a strange coincidence. I am signing this in full, as an evidence of good faith, but I must ask you not to use it for publication."

(Note: I have since secured the writer's consent to the use of this letter, on condition that I withhold the signature.) . . .

August 17.

One lives and learns. Mr. Bethel telephoned me at nine o'clock last night, the first time I have known him to use the telephone, and asked me to see him.

(Note: I have, I think, not mentioned in the Journal that the three buildings the Lodge, main house and boathouse, are on one telephone. As this fact plays an important part later, it requires explanation.)

I found him alone in the library, but with certain changes from the last time I had seen him thus. The windows were closed and locked, and the heavy curtains drawn across them; both the rear and front doors in the hall were bolted, and when I was finally obliged to ring, I could hear the old man dragging himself slowly into the hall and there stopping.

"Who is it?" he called.

"Porter."

I was on the terrace, and he opened that door for me, working laboriously with his single useful hand. Once inside, he left me to close it for myself, and went back into the library. When I followed him it was to find him seated, with a revolver close at hand as before.

"I don't like your house, Mr. Porter," he barked at me, without preliminary.

"I don't like it myself," I admitted. "I am thinking of adding to the insurance and then setting a match to it. After you are out, of course," I added.

That brought a sort of dry chuckle from him, but the next moment he was back to the attack. He supposed he was responsible for the balance of the rent, but wasn't I morally responsible if he couldn't live there? I had known the stories about the house, and yet had let it to him. There was a question there.

"There is no question," I said. "I have no idea of holding you up for the balance of the rent."

It seemed to me, however, that he hardly heard me. He was listening again, as he had before, and when he spoke it was on a totally different matter.

"You find me rather on guard," he said. "I am alone in the house."

"Where's Gordon?"

"He went into the city this morning. He has not come back."

And there was something in the way he made the statement that caused me to look at him quickly.

"You mean that he has gone for good?"

"No. I wish to God he had."

There was fear in that, and I realized then that all the place showed fear, the locked and bolted house, the dim light—only one lamp going, and that on the desk—the revolver, and the old man's twisted body, crouched and watchful.

"I am afraid of him, Mr. Porter," he said. "I think he means to kill me."

"Can't you get rid of him?"

"Don't you suppose I've tried?"

His story, if story it can be called, that rambling discourse broken into by his fits of listening, even once of sending me out to take a look around, is as follows:

He had picked the boy up in the city, knowing little or nothing about him, and from the time they arrived he had not quite trusted him. After a time, too, he began to suspect that he was getting out of the house at night, and possibly using the car.

"Not guilty in itself, perhaps," he said, "but it left me alone, for one thing. And it is not a house in which one cares to be alone." He glanced at me. "And for another—well, I needn't tell you what has been going on."

But he was not, at first, really suspicious of these night excursions, save for his resentment at being left there, alone and helpless, with a killer loose in the neighborhood. He kept a watch, therefore, not so much over the boy as over the house and himself in his absence.

"If he left a door or window open," he said, "I was at the mercy of anybody who chose to enter."

And this, he says, was the situation on the night of the 26th of July. He had gone to the boy's room and found it empty, and had after some debate decided to work his way downstairs and lock him out.

"And myself in," he said.

It took him a long time to do it; he says, too, that he was very nervous; there were sounds, especially in the dining room. Nothing he could account for, but they upset him still further, and by the time he reached the kitchen he was in a bad way. He had to sit down there.

It was while he was sitting there that he heard sounds on the porch and somebody at the door knob. From that on he says he was beyond coherent thinking, but he had no doubt in the world, because of the stealthiness of the movement, that the thing he had feared was happening. It seems never to have occurred to him that it was Gordon.

He dragged himself to the stove, found the poker, and as the door opened struck with all his strength.

"It was only when he made a leap for the bell that I knew what I had done."

He was stricken. He felt the boy's pulse and knew he was not dead, but off somewhere near the sun-dial he heard some one moving, and that alarmed him still more.

"A man never knows his cowardice," he said wryly, "until he is put to the test. I have very little idea of what I did next; my only clear recollection is of finding myself in my room. I don't remember getting there."

But—and this is the point—the boy suspected him. He was sure of it. There had been a complete change in his attitude since that time. And watching that change, studying Gordon as he had felt obliged to, he had felt that something underlay all this. In other words, gradually he had begun to associate the boy with the other crimes.

"He is weak," he said, "weak and vicious. And there is that curious state called identification; the weak see the crimes committed by the strong, admire them, admire the criminal. Then they begin to ape them as Gordon may have aped your sheep-killer, finally even identifying himself with this unknown, adopting his symbol, or whatever one chooses to call it."

I listened carefully, trying to fit this new light on Gordon's injury with the evidence as I knew it. True, the weak link in our chain against him had been that he himself had been attacked. And this was now solved in a perfectly matter-of-fact manner. But there was some discrepancy, something which eluded me until I had gone over in my mind the events of the night of the 26th in their sequence. Then I found it.

"But what about the man the boy saw enter by the gun-room window?"

"Pure invention. I feel certain. Had he accused me he knew the matter of his night excursions would come out. That was the last thing he wanted."

It was my next remark, however, which has left us, as I wrote at the beginning of this entry, just where we were before.

"You haven't said anything about the rope, Mr. Bethel. That has always—"

"Rope!" he said slowly. "What rope?"

"He was tied hand and foot when I found him."

He glanced at me, and then down at his helpless hand.

"It's a very long time since I have been able to tie a rope, Mr. Porter," he said quietly.

I remained with him until an hour or so after the last train from the city had arrived, but there was no sign of Gordon. I offered to remain for the night with him, but he declined. He would not go to bed, however, and I left him there at last, his revolver within reach.

I Found Him Alone in the Library.

Of that later talk there is one matter of real importance to record.

I have a strange picture in my mind, bearing on the relations of these two, the old man and the boy, and leading up to it; each watching the other, the old man terrified, the boy deadly. And on the surface, before Annie Cochran, all well enough between them; dictation taken and the book growing. Small surface differences, perhaps, but underneath suspicion on one side and revenge and hatred on the other.

Then Gordon took to locking his room. It was Annie Cochran who told Bethel, and from that time on that locked room played its own part between them; the old man asking himself what was hidden in it, the secretary with his sneering smile quietly carrying the key. It grew, I gathered, to have a peculiar place in the old man's imagination; he wandered down the passage to it more than once; finally Annie Cochran caught him there, trying the knob, and he had made some excuse and gone away.

But the night young Gordon flung out of the house, the same night I saw the figure at the foot of the stairs, Annie Cochran had come to him before leaving, with a key in her hand.

"I thought you might like this sir," she said. "I find it fits Mr. Gordon's door."

Then she had gone, and he went to the room and entered. The knife and the rope were there, and he took them.

"What was I to say that night, when the constable came down and reported nothing there? In ten minutes, or an hour, you were going to leave me here with him. He was watching me; he knew."

And I daresay he was right. No matter what statement had been made relative to the rope and the knife, there was no reason for Gordon's arrest that night. In ten minutes, or an hour, they would have been left together, and who knows what might have happened?

August 18.

Gordon came back early this morning. I invented an errand to the house soon after breakfast, but found that Mr. Bethel was still sleeping—as well he might—and that preparations for tomorrow's departure were well under way.

While Gordon was busy on the lower floor, Thomas and I made a tour of the house, with a view to closing it. I took advantage of my legitimate presence on the upper floor to examine the locked closet in which I had stored the red lamp. It is still there, and apparently has not been disturbed. . .

Halliday today advised for me a period of masterly inactivity. Not that he calls it so, but that is what he means.

"I have an idea, Skipper," he said, "that this calling Greenough off the case was sheer bluff. Every move he made was being watched, and unless I miss my guess you'll find he's at Bass cove, or some place nearby, under another name. I thought I saw his car a night or so ago."

What I finally gathered is that Halliday wants to eliminate me from the case, for my own sake.

"Just now," he said, "you are sitting very pretty. But one more bit of bad luck and he's ready to jump."

Although he smiled, I have an idea that he is deadly serious; that he knows Greenough is not far away, and that for some unknown reason he expects another bit of bad luck. His face is thin and haggard these days, and from the fact that he sleeps a great deal in the daytime, I am inclined to think that he sleeps very little at night.

Between him and Edith, too, I surmise some sort of mysterious understanding. At the same time, there is a noticeable absence of those three-angled conferences in which, some little time ago, we were free to air our various theories.

Willy nilly, I am consigned to inocuous desuetude.

Hayward started yesterday on his vacation.

August 20.

4:00 a. m. Mr. Bethel was murdered between eleven o'clock and midnight last night. Gordon has escaped.

7:00 a. m. Jane is at last asleep, and I have had some coffee. Perhaps if I record the events of the night it will quiet me. After all, one cannot forget such things; the only possible course is to bring them to the surface, to face them.

But I will not face that room.

Murder. The very word is evil. But no one has ever known how evil until he has seen it. Such things cannot be written; they should not be seen. They should not be.

We have had this murder. We have gone over, inch by inch, the scene of it. We have been spared no shock; the evidence of the struggle is on the walls, the floor, the furniture; we have the very knife with which it was committed. We have even gone further than that. We have followed it outside, along the drive to the garage, and from there by the car to the salt marsh beyond Robinson's point.

And yet, according to Halliday, until we have gone still further, we have had no murder, according to the law.

Ever since daylight, I have been struggling to see the justice of a law where, when Gordon is found—and Greenough believes he will be found—we cannot convict him unless we also find that bit of old flesh and blood and bone which was once Simon Bethel.

Is it only necessary, to escape justice, that a criminal artfully dispose of his crime?

And by how narrow a margin he did escape it! A matter of minutes. Between my calling Halliday on the telephone and my meeting him at the terrace; perhaps even between that and our entrance into that wrecked room. A matter of minutes.

In one thing only did he make an error, and even that may not have been an error. He may coolly have abandoned his suitcase, packed and hidden in the shrubbery; may have stood there a second or so, considering it, and then decided to let it lie.

The most grievous thing to me is that I should have given him the warning. And the most terrible picture I have is that, when I called Halliday, he stood listening in at the telephone, craftily calculating: "Can I make it? Can I not?" With that behind him. . . .

Crafty. As old in crime as crime is old, for all his youth. Out on the bay disposing of his horrible freight, and watching the lanterns as they searched for the boat; seeing them scatter, looking for other boats with which to follow him out onto the water, and then quietly heading back, into the creek again, and escaping through the wood.

Crafty, beyond words.

August 21.

The excitement is still intense. I have hardly seen Halliday since our trouble; he is working with the police, of which a number have come to assist Greenough. Curious crowds stand outside our gates, which we have been obliged to close and lock. A few of the more adventurous, gaining admission by the lane, are turned back there by guards who are on duty day and night.

Thomas, standing at the gate, has orders to admit only the detectives and duly accredited members of the press.

On the bay we have once more the familiar crowd of searching boats. Off the Point, dragging has been going on, but with no result. Owing to the fact that no guards were placed by the boat, a large portion of it has already been taken away by morbid individuals who will place their trophies, I daresay, on tables or mantlepieces, and thereafter gloat over them.

Truly, just as the lunatic always insists that he is sane, so do the sane often demonstrate that they are mad.

And so far, nothing.

Nothing, that is, which leads to Gordon's apprehension. From the time he turned back in the boat and landing, made his escape into the woods above Robinson's point, he disappeared entirely. Here and there a clew has turned up, to end in disappointment. Greenough believes that he will be found, that he cannot escape the police drag-net, but I am not so sure. . . .

Although almost forty-eight hours have passed Jane, has not yet opened up the subject of the telephone, and because of her morbid reserve on such matters, I have not told the police.

Asked how I had happened to be at the telephone and thus receive the alarm, I have replied that the bell rang, that I went to the instrument, and was immediately aware that one of the receivers was down, either at Halliday's or at the main house; that I heard a crash over the wire, followed by a second and nearer one, and after that a silence; that following that I heard, near the receiver, the sobbing breath of exhaustion, and that immediately after that the receiver went up, and I called Halliday frantically; and that, on his replying, I told him my suspicion that something was wrong at the main house, and to meet me there at once.

But there is a discrepancy here which may cause me trouble if they come back to it. A telephone such as ours does not ring if one of the receivers is down. And the plain fact is that our telephone did not ring at all that night.

As I have not yet recorded the events of that tragic evening in their sequence, I shall do so now.

Halliday had dined with us, and had been more like himself than for some time past. After dinner he and Edith sat on the veranda, and going to lower a shade I saw that she was holding a match while he drew something on a bit of paper. But the match went out almost at once, and I would have thought no more of it, had I not heard Edith say:

"And the cabinet was there?"

"In the corner," he replied.

I am no eavesdropper, so I drew the shade and turned away.

He left at something after ten, and Edith joined us. She was very quiet, and sat watching me play solitaire while Jane sewed industriously. At half past ten or thereabouts, Jane suddenly said:

"The telephone is ringing."

Both Edith and I looked up in amazement; the instrument was in the small hall, not ten feet from where I sat; it would have been impossible for it to ring without our hearing it, and we had heard nothing.

"You've been asleep, Jane!" Edith accused her. But I glanced at her, and I remember that she was oddly relaxed in her chair; her face looked white and her eyes were slightly fixed.

"It is ringing," she said, thickly.

And that is how I happened to be at the telephone that night. And how, too, I gave the alarm which enabled the murderer to escape, by calling Halliday.

"Get your revolver and meet me at the main house," I said. "There's something wrong there."

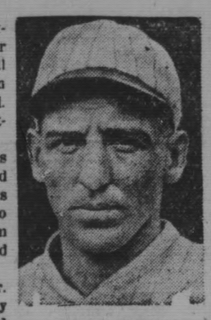
Flagstead Rates as Great



Ira Flagstead.

CATCHER, third sacker, shortstop, outfielder, lumberman, steam fitter, raiser of game chickens and English call ducks, and addicted to sightseeing with an ambition to make a trip around the world. That's Ira Flagstead, star hard-working outfielder of the Boston Red Sox.

Rated as one of the greatest outfielders in the game today, Flagstead works hard because he knows no other way. He always has worked hard. He always has tried to give his employer the best he had in him and that's why the Boston fans remembered him with a "Flagstead day" last summer.

Flaggy is more than a mere center fielder. For several years he has been flanked by rookie or crude gardeners at Fenway field and it has been Ira's voluntary task to try to in till in them some idea of how to play the outfield without wearing a mask and protector to avoid being hit by misjudged fly balls. In fact, Boston writers often have referred to him as the "Sox Outfield."

And yet Flagstead was everything but an outfielder before he became one of the best fly catchers in the land. There was a ball field across the street from his home in his native town of Montague, Mich., and he was the town team's catcher at the age of sixteen.

Then, he listened to Horace Greeley's advice and went West. He put in two years in a lumber mill in Little Rock, Wash., moved to Olympia, Wash., first as a mill worker, then as a steam fitter. Incidentally, he kept on catching. Finally, at the age of twenty-four, much later in life than the average player breaks into the pro game, he signed with the Tacoma team of the Northwestern league and caught and played third base and the outfield.

He batted .381 and found his way to Detroit, which farmed him out to Chattanooga after using him behind the bat in one exhibition game. He batted .381 in the Southern league also, and back to Detroit he came to remain four seasons and then be sold to Boston, where he has given his best ever since despite discouraging conditions.

For instance, Boston outfielders seldom shift for various batsmen. "Why is that?" retored Flagstead. "Because we have had so many young pitchers lacking in control. Behind a pitcher who has control like Sam Jones, Uhle, Pennock, Braxton or Hoyt, an outfielder has some idea where the ball is to be pitched and to what field the batter should hit it. But when you are behind a young pitcher who just hopes that his offerings will be strikes, you just trust to luck you are playing the batter correctly."

Oh, yes, he is one of the few ball players who does not play cards. Does not even read during the baseball season as he believes it might affect his batting eyes. And he spends his winters fishing for salmon and trout and raising game roosters and call ducks. Such a life, he opines, will keep him in the majors for a few more years.

Cub Machine Is Creation of Pilot Joe McCarthy

The Cub machine, which appears to have been almost perfectly finished and polished by the acquisition of Rogers Hornsby, is largely the creation of the astute Joe McCarthy.

Since he left the minor leagues to take charge of the Cubs the team has been almost entirely rebuilt, and every move made in the rebuilding was engineered by McCarthy.

He brought Riggs Stephenson back from the miners when every other manager in the major leagues couldn't see him.

He pulled a fast one on the New York Giants when he slipped in a draft claim for Hack Wilson.

He brought Woody English and Freddy Maguire up from the minor leagues, took Art Nehf when he was aired in Cincinnati and arranged the transfer of Hal Carlson from the Phillies.

He secured Kiki Cuyler when he heard that the Pirates had decided to get rid of him, and he was the first one to the counter when a friendly tip brought the information that Hornsby was no longer considered an essential in Boston.

Big Deficit Due to Stolen Baseballs

The fans who pocketed baseballs knocked into the bleachers by lusty hitters were contributing factors to a move that may propel Harrisburg out of the New York-Pennsylvania league. Fans captured $1,000 worth of baseballs last season, an official report said. That is part of the $6,740.31 indebtedness of the club and a committee has been appointed to decide whether the franchise shall be kept.

Harriers Disappear

It is a favorite gag of cross-country fans to relate the mysterious disappearance of harriers along the route and the consequent searching parties formed. This season, on the same Saturday, two meets each lost a runner. When the men were checked in at the Northwestern-Indiana run at Bloomington, a Purple harrier was lost and when Minnesota-Iowa got through at Iowa City, a Gopher runner failed to report. Both were found at a later hour.

OOSTERBAAN WAS EXCEPTIONAL END

Put on Mythical All-American Team Three Times.

Benny Oosterbaan ended his college days with the satisfaction of having accomplished what few college men ever succeeded in doing.

He carried away with him a solid gold football studded with three diamonds, jeweled evidence that he was elevated to the mythical All-American eleven three times.

His name will go down in football history along with those of Shevlin and Hinkey of Yale and a few others. He will be remembered and referred to as one of the great ends of all time, writes H. G. Salsinger in the Detroit News.

Here, indeed, was a football player—a man who stood head and shoulders above his fellows. It may be a long stretch of seasons before an equal appears on the horizon.

He was possessed of mechanical skill and football intuition, a man born to the game, with every natural talent for it. These talents he developed and polished to the last degree.

He came into the game when the end position had been made more and more difficult and important, after a succession of seasons saw an ever increasing number of duties piled upon the wingmen.

How Oosterbaan compared with Hinkey and Shevlin will never be established, for end play in the days of Hinkey and Shevlin was comparatively simple with what end play is today. There was no forward passing in the days of Hinkey and Shevlin, no open play. No one will ever know whether either Hinkey and Shevlin could have done as many things as well as Oosterbaan did them.

It may be said without qualification that Oosterbaan is the best end the game has produced since the introduction of the forward pass. He better than any other end in the last 20 years, solved the difficulties of the position. He was not content to be merely an end; he extended his duties to forward passing and ball carrying.

Heralded as the greatest receiver of forward passes in the game during his first year of collegiate football, Oosterbaan became one of the best forward passers of all time in his last year of football. He was a master at both ends of the air attack in his final season of college competition.

New Cardinal Pilot

Bobby Dobbs Is Still Boxing at Age of 66

Bobby Dobbs probably lasted longer than any other fighter listed in the record books, according to Fight Stories Magazine. He has engaged in ring warfare for thirty-five years and at the age of sixty still boxes every day in the gymnasium with youngsters a third his years. Bob Fitzsimmons was in the ring for thirty years, and Frank Craig, the Harlem coffee cooler, as long.

Dobbs, slim and lean, still has some of his old speed. It was a treat to watch him with sluggers like Bobby Barrett. The old fellow tried to teach the Clifton Heights redhead something of his boxing skill, but never succeeded. Barrett was just a slugger and could have stopped Dobbs any time he landed on him; but in their short training bouts he never could land.

The horse was once raced by the famous Grand Circuit reinsman, Walter R. Cox. His career proved one of the most brilliant in pacing annals. He made 130 starts, won 58, was second 40 times, third 16½, fourth 6½ and unplaced on only nine occasions. He won the huge sum of $42,651.

French, director of the department of industrial relations, declared recently. French reported that a survey by his department showed no reductions in the basic wage scale of $15, $12.50, $10 and $5 for women extras and $3 for inexperienced players. The department reported that the studios are co-operating fully in complying with State laws relative to pay rolls and sanitary conditions at studios and "location" sites.

The fundamental cause of the poisoning in mussels which last year killed six people and brought sickness to 102 others in various places on the coast north and south of San Francisco, is still a mystery. After a year of study, Dr. Karl F. Meyer, director of Hooper Foundation for Medical Research at the University of California, reports that nothing can be learned, except that the poisoning probably results from a disease within the mussels, not connected with spoilage. Cooking does not remove the poison, but it is minimized by drawing off the water in which they are boiled.

The $30,000,000 which California taxpayers provided as loans to World War veterans for the purchase of homes and farms has been exhausted and 10,000 California veterans will be denied the benefit they seek unless additional funds are forthcoming, George M. Stout, secretary of the State Veterans' Welfare Board, reports to State Adjutant James K. Fisk of the American Legion. The sum has been invested in approximately 6000 homes and 275 farms in California, Stout said, adding a movement to submit to the people another bond proposal for continuation of the loan program is now afoot among members of the Legislature.

While the War Department has plans for the eventual abandonment of the Presidio of Monterey, it does not contemplate definite action in the near future. Officers of the general staff said it may be a year or two before these plans can be carried out, due to the fact that the department's building program has not progressed sufficiently to provide accommodations for the troops that will be sent from Monterey. It is probable that the cavalry will be sent to one of the Mexican border posts, and the field artillery to Fort Lewis, Wash. New barracks are under construction at Fort Lewis and at several posts along the border, and the change in station will not be effective until these barracks have been completed.

Gifts of $3,500 were announced last week by President W. W. Campbell at a meeting of the board of regents of the University of California. The two principal gifts were one of $2,000 from the California committee of the relation of electricity to agriculture for research work in this field and $1,000 from the California Alumnae Association of further the archaeological work of Prof. H. F. Lutz in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates. The board accepted the resignation of Prof. A. W. Marrall, College of Agriculture at Davis.

The city of Grass Valley was rocked as by an earthquake one morning last week when an overheated air compressor at the North Star Mine exploded and partially wrecked the power plant at the mine. A steel tank weighing 1,000 pounds was torn from its foundation and hurled 150 yards. Two hundred miners, who had reported off duty from the underground shift, narrowly escaped injury, and hundreds of residents of the city were driven from their homes by the force of the explosion which rocked dozens of houses.

Drugs and Geography

Loading Lighters at Zanzibar.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

NO BUSINESS reaches out into so many remote places of the world as does that of the pharmacist, a fact which it will be remembered was demonstrated graphically during the World war when the commerce of the world was disrupted.

Consider as a typical case, asafoetida gum. Much of it comes from the city of Herat in Afghanistan. Numerous citizens of Herat make their living by going down yearly midway between the mountains and the Persian desert, after the rains clothe the plains with verdure, there, with much back-bending, to incise the Ferula root. From the incisions comes a milky gum, which, dried, forms the asafoetida of commerce.

Throughout history man has combed the out-of-the-way places for his drugs. It was the trade in drugs and spices which made Venice from the Thirteenth to the Sixteenth century the most important commercially and the richest city in Europe, and it was the loss of this commerce which caused her rapid decadance and the passing of her riches and her glory.

The story of Venice is so essentially romantic that to mention commerce in connection with it seems out of drawing. Yet it was as merchants that the Venetians were famed. The traffic in spices and aromatic drugs began to assume vast proportions in the Middle ages, as the people of Europe became educated to a hunger for the spicy flavors of the East. From India and China and Persia came not only silks and laces, but more important, spices and oils and drugs, and Venice was quick to realize the importance of having this commerce pass through her port.

The knowledge of medicines used by the Moors and Arabs, which was brought back by the Crusaders, helped to educate the people of many lands to the uses of balsams and spices of the oriental markets. The embarkation point for Palestine was Venice. The Venetian merchant marine profited well by furnishing transport service, and during the Fourth Crusade, finding the Crusaders unable to pay their passage money, the Venetians forthwith enlisted them as soldiers in a war against their Christian neighbors, the Dalmatians, and the Infidels got off scot-free!

Columbus Was After "Spices."

The monopoly of Venice was resented, as is inevitable; her prosperity was envied. This is why all the explorers of that period sought a short ocean route to India. Columbus, it will be remembered, sought the "spices of the Indies" rather than a new land. So from the hour when, on May 20, 1498, Vasco da Gama fulfilled the ambition of his Portuguese sovereign, blazed a new trail in the uncharted deep and sailed into Calicut, after rounding Cape of Good Hope, the commercial greatness of the Italian port was doomed.

When the news reached Venice that Portuguese carracks laden with spices had come into the harbor at Lisbon without the necessity of touching at Venice "the whole city was disturbed and astounded," says the ancient chronicler, Priuli, in his diary. They had ample cause for worry, for they faced the inevitable.

How Venice warred on Portugal; of the later wars between Portuguese, Spanish, Dutch and English to assert supremacy in the spice and drug trade; of the long voyages, with decimation of the crews by pirates, by mutineers, and by the often fatal and always horrible scourge of scurvy—these tales belong to the heroic age of the seas, and have furnished inspiration to many a poet and novelist.

Well may poets sing of Drake and Hawkins, and Greenville, and Oxenham meeting, with their little 200-ton ships, the great galleys of Spain and defeating them! But the prizes they captured were galleons laden with cloves, and ginger, and pepper, and frankincense, and dragon's blood, and cinnamon, and when these cargoes were found they asked not for doubloons.

Motley, in his "History of the United Netherlands," emphasizes this point very well. "The world had lived in former ages," he says, "very comfortably without cloves." But in the beginning of the Seventeenth century that odoriferous pistil had been the cause of so many pitched battles and obstinate wars; of so much vituperation, negotiation, and intriguing, that the world's destiny seemed to have become almost dependent upon the growth of a particular gilly-flower. Out of its sweetness had grown such bitterness among nations as not torrents of blood could wash away.

Aleppo a Shipping Point.

When Venice was distributing drugs and spices to the West, Aleppo, Syria, was the most important concentration point for the eastern goods, and it still helps to supply the druggist's shelves. Gum tragacanth—used as a source of mucilage in medicine and the arts—is one of the principal products sent from Aleppo today.

Concerning Aleppo there is some interesting correspondence in the records of the old English Muscovy company. Edwards, one of their factors, writing in 1566, said: "Therein are many Venetians . . . who buy gall, tallow, saffron, skins, cotton, wool . . . and also will serve us of all kinds of spices, we giving them sufficient warning to fetch it in the Indies and will deliver it to us in Shamaky."

And as there is nothing new under the sun, another factor tells about the light Russian oil which now, when it is refined, we prize so highly as a medicine: "There is a great river," he wrote, "which falleth into the Caspian sea by a town called Bachu whereunto which is a strange thing to behold. For there issueth out of the ground a large quantity of oil, which oil they fetch from the uttermost bounds of all Persia, it serveth all the country to burn in their houses. This oil is black and is called nyfte. There is also by the said town of Bachu another kind of oil which is white and very precious; it is supposed to be the same that is here called petroleum." Today men are competing for that oil as in his day they fought for cloves!

Camphor, which is important not only in medicine but in the arts and manufactures, was an example of efficient production and control of output. After the Japanese-Chinese war Japan obtained control of the Formosa camphor industry. Although the Formosa forests are practically inexhaustible, forestry measures were instituted for replanting and care of trees; 2,000 police were furnished to protect workers and large refining plants were built. Workers were paid a fixed sum. The distribution of the entire product was let by contract and the right of sale awarded an English firm, the latter contracting to conduct the sale of camphor in New York, London, Hamburg and Hongkong, and to accept from Japan a definite amount of camphor each year. Today a growing part of the camphor used in the West is being made in western laboratories.

Batavia's Days of Glory.

Batavia, as of old, is still a great export center for the spice and drug trade, as it was when it was fortified as the capital of the "Spice Islands," and was known as the "Queen of the East." In those days, when every sea voyage was a perilous undertaking, it was only natural that a warlike community should assemble in such a place. And so picturesque soldiers of fortune and adventurers from all parts of the world gathered about its canals and in its white walls, besides Dutch and Japanese, many Germans, Portuguese, French, Chinese and Moors; for, of course, being a Dutch city, it was intersected by canals, and, being a rich community, it was fortified.

With its picturesque and adventurous population, its quaint architectural scheme, and its gleaming snow-white ramparts outstanding like a finely chiseled cameo in the glare of the tropical sun against the turquoise ocean, it was a dream city of the departed days of piracy and buccaneering. A garrison of a thousand men was there in the Seventeenth century, and an equal number to guard the Dutch monopoly of the cinnamon trade in Ceylon. Today the old fortifications have crumbled; the old "city" proper is no more.

Fighting Insect Pests

One of the methods by which the United States Department of Agriculture hopes to control the ravages of the Japanese bettle, the corn borer and other imported insect pests is through the importation of insect enemies of the destructive pests. As a rule when imported insects reveal themselves as extremely destructive, it is because conditions in the United States are more favorable than in the land from which they came, and this is frequently due to the fact that insect parasites of the destroyers were not imported with them.

Big Day in History.

The Post Office department says that the first aerial mail delivery made in the United States took place in September, 1911, when the first bag of mail was delivered to the Mineola post office. Postmaster General F. H. Hitchcock sent the mail and E. L. Ovington pilot, delivered it.

Tunkhannock Viaduct

IN THE beginning, railroads traversing mountainous regions rather generally built their lines through canyons and alongside of narrow and crooked streams with the natural result that they had many sharp curves and heavy grades in their makeup. This was all very well in that day. But, times changed, traffic increased—more, longer and faster trains were necessary. These self-same curves and grades became serious handicaps. Great railroad systems found it necessary, for economic and other reasons, to perform astonishing feats of engineering in bridging streams, tunneling mountains and reshaping landscapes to modernize their lines and rid themselves of these objectionable features.

Outstanding among such accomplishments is the record-breaking Tunkhannock viaduct, near the great anthracite coal fields in northeastern Pennsylvania, which carries the tracks of the Lackawanna railroad from mountain to mountain across the valley of Tunkhannock creek.

About half a mile long and 240 feet high, this mammoth monolith of concrete and steel consists of a full dozen great arched spans, ten of which are each 180 feet long, into which went something like 4,500,000 cubic feet of concrete and 2,300,000 pounds of steel. Tunkhannock has the reputation of being far and away the largest concrete bridge in all the world.

It cost a huge sum, but it also shortened the line almost four miles, saved 2,400 degrees of curvature and reduced the grade 327 feet, with the result that longer trains can be handled at faster speeds.

A City Afloat

WHEN the world's largest transocean ship—the Leviathan—sets sail for a jaunt across the briny deep it is virtually a city afloat.

This tremendous vessel has a passenger capacity of 4,000 and carries a crew upwards of 1,100—a total of 5,100 persons or more than the population of many county-seat towns.

It is 950 feet long and 185 feet high, her nine decks have an area of seven and one-half acres and it makes the trip between America and Europe, which required 145 days in prairie-schooner times, in five days and a few hours.

It has forty-six boilers, 230 furnaces, uses oil for fuel, is capable of developing 100,000 horse power, her loaded weight is 114,000,000 pounds and normal draft thirty-nine and one-half feet.

The amount of equipment required for the operation of this monster ship is astonishing. Among the items are 221,000 pieces of china, 48,000 pieces of glassware, 71,000 pieces of silver and 23,000 kitchen, pantry and store-room utensils; 4,400 mattresses, 34,000 pounds of blankets and 190,000 pieces of linen; 140 clocks, 600 telephones, 15,000 electric lights and 500 miles of wiring.

To provide for one trip, her lockers are stored with 186,000 pounds of meat, 60,000 pounds of potatoes, 70,000 pounds of flour, 15,000 pounds of butter, 2,000 quarts of milk, 2,240 pounds of tobacco, 600 boxes of apples, 16,000 pounds of sugar and three tons of tea and coffee—along with staggering quantities of various other edibles.

Gramercy Park

WHEN, in 1831, a former mayor of New York set aside a plot of ground, had it enclosed by fence and given to the owners of the surrounding property, he started what undoubtedly as one of the first attempts at city planning in this country.

The name Gramercy, it seems, came down from Kromworsscki, meaning "crooked little swamp"—from a creek which meandered through this section when the Dutch occupied the Island of Manhattan. This park is privileged, therefore, to boast of antiquity as one of its charms.

Rich indeed is this seclusive spot at Nineteenth street and Lexington avenue, New York, in extraordinary associations. Many outstanding men of their times lived around it. History records that the plan to link America and Europe by cable was first discussed in an abutting mansion; Samuel J. Tilden, governor of New York and who almost became President of the United States brought political distinction to it; the late President Roosevelt was born just around the corner from it.

A little city within a big one, so to speak, the residents have experienced uneasiness many times lest their exclusiveness be disturbed as the march of commerce advanced upon it—the erection of a hotel, the threats to run a car line through it and a subway under it; during the turmoil of the Civil war negroes were strung from lamp posts nearby.

Although now walled in by towering structures and invaded by family hotels and clubs, this historically famous and cherished neighborhood continues to retain an exclusive residential character of noticeable and distinctive charm.

Hardest Known Metal Is American Product

A new metal so hard that it will bore smooth holes in concrete, or cut screw threads in a glass rod, was exhibited for the first time at the recent convention of the American Society for Steel Treating at Philadelphia. With present-day tools such feats are difficult or even impossible. The new material, known as carboloy, and consisting of tungsten carbide, a compound of tungsten and carbon, and cobalt, a metal like nickel, is the invention of Dr. Samuel L. Hoyt of the research laboratory of the General Electric company. It is so hard that it will cut glass like a diamond, and will even scratch a sapphire, which is next below the diamond in the scale of hardness. Ordinary steel tools are quickly worn down when held against an emery wheel, but the new metal itself wears down the wheel.

Tobacco "Puff" Made Barrie Pipe Smoker

Two inveterate pipe smokers are James M. Barrie and Stanley Baldwin, British prime minister. At a recent public dinner Baldwin revealed that Barrie—who was also a guest—never smoked prior to the publication of his novel, "My Lady Nicotine," in which he referred to a certain brand of tobacco.

It seems that an enterprising reader of the book wrote to Barrie and asked what was the particular tobacco mixture he had in mind. Barrie did not know the name of a single brand of tobacco, so he answered at random, naming one he saw advertised.

Its fame was made, and out of curiosity Barrie one day tried a pipeful.

"He liked it so well," chuckled Mr. Baldwin, "that he has kept to it ever since."—Kansas City Star.

Menlo Park

"Well done thou good and faithful servants, you have been faithful in a few things. We will make you master over many things." This is what the Menlo Park Planning Commission expected to hear Tuesday evening when its final report was up for discussion at a public meeting called by the city council to go over the report on zoning ordinance and suggest changes. Instead, the members of the commission heard veiled criticisms and received a severe "panning". Not one in the big gathering uttered a word of commendation or praise for the many nights of hard work put into the report and for the money spent by the members for the betterment of the city. The commission for several months have labored diligently and unselfishly with a view of making Menlo Park a big and better place in which to live. They hired an expert with a national repuation, G. W. Hayler to aid them in their work, paying the greater portion of his fee from their own pockets. The commission consulted property owners, received advice from prominent citizens of the city and, having in mind the future growth and beautification of the community, they formulated the report, the most complete and elaborate of any ever presented to any municipality on the peninsula. The commission is proud of its work and fully willing to submit its report to the people who are to be the final judges in the matter.

The meeting on Tuesday evening was largely attended. Councilman Blake presided, and F. W. Johnson acted as secretary. The members of the council present were Walker, Blake and Weeden.

City Attorney Whitworth read the ordinance in a general way and explaining the main features as he went along.

Carl Germann, owner of lots 2, 3, and 4 in Stanford Park asked the ordinance be changed so that a bungalow court could be erected on his property. The request was taken into consideration and may be granted. Miss Noel thought that small apartments and duplex houses should be erected in other streets than provided by the proposed ordinance, so that families could secure apartments for $25 and $30 a month. Many desirable families would be lured to the city with these cheap rentals.

E. E. Quayle contended that the proposed business district was too large, that the area should be centralized and that all the business be confined to a few blocks in the center of the city. Hayler answered Quayle that the future of the city was being considered as well as the present needs, and that a large business area was necessary. F. R. Cain thought the setback line of thirty feet on certain streets should be remedied. J. J. Harcom was of the opinion that the territory from Encinal avenue to Glenwood avenue on the highway ought to residential and not a business district. Weeden replied, saying that the commission was advised that the property owners wanted it as a business district. C. H. Smith thought the irregularity of the shape of the lots in various portions of the city would cause a hardship to the property owners in complying with the terms of the ordinance.

The principal speakers of the evening were: J. H. Sullivan, Miss E. Noel, Attorney F. R. Cain, E. E. Quayle, J. J. Harcom, G. W. Hayler, an dJohn McGucken.

All of the suggestions offered will be taken into consideration by the council in the passage of the ordinance. No further public hearings will be held.

Tax Collector McSweeney last week received a remittance from S. G. Hayes from far off China, to be applied to the two installments of taxes on lot 7, block one, Menalto Park, one of the best selling subdivisions on the peninsula. Hayes, who is a big business man of Hongkong, was here this year when he bought the property. He saw the potential value of the land and at once made a purchase. When he retires he hopes to spend the remaining years of his life in Menalto Park, the land of his dreams.

Lorena Klay, aged six years, residing on Laurel avenue with her parents, was run down by an automobile driven by A. Cohen of Redwood City Wednesday and injured. The girl was taken to the Palo Alto hospital where it was found she was suffering from severe bruises. Later she was removed to her home. The girl was crossing the street from Duffill and Doyle hall, where she had attended a Christmas tree party.

Before she reached the oil station across the highway she was struck by the fender of the machine and thrown to the ground. Chief of Police Furman and Edward Feely, who were standing on the bank corner on Santa Cruz avenue, came to the aid of the injured child. As the festivities in the hall censed the children rushed down the hall stairs scattering in all directions as they reached the sidewalk. There was no one to escort the children who had to cross the highway from the hall to Santa Cruz avenue at the oil station.

All the churches will hold extra services on Tuesday in celebration of Christmas. A midnight mass will be celebrated at the Church of the Nativity at 8 and 10:30 o'clock. An augmented choir will render sweet music.

The Presbyterian church will hold extra services at the usual hour, while the Episcopal church will have services at the usual hour when an augmented choir will render a fine program of sacred music.

At a recent meeting of the local lodge of Masons, tre following officers were elected for the term: J. T. Cooper, master; Victor Hugo, senior warden; Bert L. Harper, junior warden; John Glunz, treasurer; J. Ross Hardy, secretary.
